

Looking after your mental wellbeing

It's all right not to be all right. COVID-19 has had a significant impact on how we interact with others, our work, study and many other aspects of our daily lives. Everyone reacts differently to difficult events, and some may find this time more challenging than others.

It's understandable if you or your loved ones sometimes feel sad, distressed, worried or anxious. The ways people think, feel and behave are likely to change over time – we all have good days and bad days. So it's important to look after your mental wellbeing.

If you or those around you are concerned about your mental wellbeing, there are tools and information available to help.

If you're worried about how someone else is feeling, it's okay to talk about it. The best way to start is to ask them if they're all right. Just being there and staying connected can be a big help.
